Israel Sends Jets Against Syrians After 39 Die in Lebanon Attack

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches BEIRUT - Israeli jets attacked Palestinian and Syrian positions in the hills east of Beirnt on Friday, hours after a huge bomb explosion destroyed the headquarters of the di military governor in the port city of Tyre in southern Lebanon. At least 39 persons were killed in the blast, among them 29 Israeli soldiers and 10 Arab prisoners. As many as 60 persons were reported to have been killed in Israel's retaliatory raids.

Responsibility for the Tyre bombing was claimed, in a telephone call to the French news agency Agence France-Presse, by Islamic Holy War, a pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem group. The group previously said that it carried out the Oct. 23 truck-bomb attacks on U.S. and French bases in Beirot, in which nearly 300 American and

Jobless Rate Fell in U.S. In October

By John M. Berry

WASHINGTON - The civilian unemployment rate in the United States unexpectedly fell half a percentage point last month to 8.8 percent partly as the result of a drop of 553,000 in the size of the labor force, the Labor Department reported Friday.

It was the lowest rate since February 1982, and was a full two percentage points below the reces-sion peak of last November. There has been no comparable decline in the rate since the early days of the Korean War more than three decades ago.

In the 10 months since February. a stronger than expected econom recovery bas added more than 2.8 million jobs to the economy and reduced the unemployed population from 12 million to fewer than 9.9 million last month.

Reagan administration officials hailed the drop in unemployment. The chief White House spokesman. Larry M. Speakes, traveling with President Ronald Reagan in North Carolina, said the repon was "exceedingly good news that Americans are going back to work."

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan declared, "This is excellent news by anyone's measure. There were few who, even a few months ago, forecast that unemployment would fall this far. this fast.

"Today's announcement demonstrates two things; that the conventional wisdom is often off the mark; and secondly, that the Rea-gan economic policies are really paying off for the American economy and American workers."

However, economists said the extraordinarily sharp drop in the unemployment rate was due oot just to the strength of the recovery but also to me failure of the labor force to grow as it normally does during a recovery.

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada - Sir Paul Scoon, the governor-general of Grenada, bas announced that be will appoint members of a broadbased nonpolitical interim government early next week.

Sir Paul, at the moment the only civilian authority here, said at a news conference Thursday that he boped elections could be beld within six months but that be thought they would certainly take place within a year.

He said any Grenadian would be free to participate in the elections provided they had no criminal charges against them."

Sir Paul said that, despite the continued presence of U.S. troops here, civil authority on the island bad not been subordinated to the U.S. military. He said law and order were being maintained by U.S. troops and soldiers from other Caribbean countries under a state of emergency that he declared.

He said he was taking advice on security matters from Colonel Ken Barnes, the Jamaican commander of the 300-man Caribbean military that has been working closely with the Americans.

But it is only intellectuals who worried about where authority lies," he said. "I am more concerned with getting Grenadians working and returning to our peaceful tradition."

The governor-general, who was appointed by Britain to be Queen Elizabeth's representative in this Commonwealth country, said earlier in the week that he had asked all Libyan and Soviet diplomats and most Cubans to leave the island.

Alister McIntyre, deputy secre-tary general of the UN Conference on Trade and Development in Geneva, has received informal inquiries from Sir Paul about the job, a UN spokesman in Geneva said.

The appointment of Mr. McIntyre, a British-educated economist, is strongly supported by the sevenmember Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, which requested the U.S. action in Grenada, according to Lester Bird, deputy prime minister of Antigua.

"He could come clothed in the UN aura," said Mr. Bird, and ease reconciliation on the island. Mr. McIntyre, former head of the Caconference in St. George's that U.S. ribbean Common Market, enjoys forces on the island had "already such respect in the region, Mr. Bird

Is the United States virtually without open, powerful support in the court of official international opinion? Despite the voting Wednesday, in which only Israel El Salvador and the Caribbean countries that joined in the Grenada invasion voted with the United States, diplomats were cautioning Thursday against such a view.

In particular, they said, Wednesday's events were mixed enough to show a good deal of sympathy for the invasion and a failure of the pro-Soviet countries, which led the attack on the United States, to succeed in all their objectives.

The assembly session was filled with often-bitter procedural quarrels. At the outset, the assembly approved, 60-54, a motion by South Yemen to cut off debate be fore it had even started. The resolution deploring the invasion that was then approved contained virtu-ally all of the language of the reso-lation vetoed by the United States in the Security Council last week. Soviet Warns Of U.S. Attack In Lebanon

By Serge Schmemann

MOSCOW — Tass warned Friday that the United States was planning a "massive attack" on 'national-patriotic forces" in Leb-

"In the leading circles of the Soviet Union it is deemed necessary to warn the United States government with all seriousness about this and in connection with the plans to expand the armed interference in the affairs of Lebanon that are being harbored in Washington," the agency said.

The warning was called a "Tass statement," which carries the weight of an official government position. The agency said it hased its warning on statements made hy President Ronald Reagan. Secrelary of State George P. Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, as well as "information coming from various sources."

Linking the purported plans for a "large-scale military operation in Lehanon" with the intervention in Grenada, Tass said: "The pretensions of the United States to establish American orders in countries whose social system is not to its liking, its striving to place itself, its garrow interests above international law and general human interests, in make strength a gauge of justice and lawfulness - all this cannot hut hring grave consequences not only for others but also for the United States itself."

Mr. Reagan has said on several occasions that the bombing of the U.S. Marine headquarters in Beirut Oct. 23 would be avenged, but neither he nor his aides have publicly identified those responsible or specified the form of retaliation.

Marcos Invites Military To Attend Cabinet Talks On Major Policy Issues

By Robert Trumbull New York Times Service

MANILA - President Ferdinand E. Marcos inaugurated a new policy Friday of having the country's highest military officers at-tend cabinet meetings on important policy-making decisions.

The top-ranking officer present at Friday's cabinet session was Major General Fabian C. Ver, the chief of staff of the Philippine armed forces. General Ver, whose name has figured in speculation that the military might take over in a coup should Mr. Marcos leave office, or if the disturbed political situation here worsened, told Mr. Marcos on national television that he and his fellow officers "recognize the supremacy" of civilian authority. Mr. Marcos is now involved in a controversy with opposition leadparty, the New Society Movement, over the question of succession should the president die or become incapable of holding office. Mr. Marcos has rejected opposition proposals that the constitution be amended to create a new position of vice president insisting instead on retaining the current system under which power would pass to a 5-member executive committee.

A rumored candidate for the top job is the president's wife, Imelda, a highly controversial political figure who is now the minister of human settlements in her hushand's cabinet besides being a member of the National Assembly and governor of Metro Manila, as the capital district is called. Mrs. Marcos, who has been criticized for personal extravagance, has said that she intends to quit elective politics when her term in the National Assembly ends next year.

Mr. Marcos, who bas been in office for 18 years and whose current six-year term expires in 1987. said on television that he wanted the military authorities to be more aware of the reasons for government policies from now on. For this reason, he said, he will have them present at meetings of his cabinet's executive committee.

households, or one-third of all families in the nation, are in the New York Times Service luxury class, with incomes at least 30 percent over the amounts needed to pay taxes and live in reasonable comfort, according to a study by the Census Bureau and the Conference Board, a business research group.

Based on income statistics for 1980, the study, released Wednesday, calculated how much average households actually spent for all consumer outlays in 1980. Any after-tax in-come that exceeded 130 percent of such outlays was classified as luxury or "discretionary" in-

For example, average con-sumer spending for an elderly couple in 1980 was $12,930, and 130 percent of that was $16,810. so any household with an income of more than $16,810 was considered to have "discretionary income." A household with two adults aged 35 to 39 and ered in the luxury class if its after-tax income was over $26,165.

Third Quarterly

Like Foreign Affairs and Foreign Policy, those thick quarterlies on international concerns, it is thick and quarterly. But the World Policy Journal, which made its debut at newsstands Wednesday, at $4.75 a copy, is seeking a younger group of scholars and a more diverse group of readers than its competitors.

"The postwar period in which the United States called the tune is over," said Archi-bald L. Gillies, president of the World Policy Institute, which publishes the journal. The institute, founded in 1948, is a nonpartisan, group that supports world peace. "We have to develop new ways to get along in the world," Mr. Gillies said.

So who needs yet another forcign affairs quarterly? Alice Tepper Martin, president of the Council on Economic Priorities, said, "If it's thick and obsoure, we need fewer. If it's thick and pungent and relevant, we need more."

Americana

An era largely unmourned by American homemakers will come to an end Nov. 22 when the Maytag Co. cranks out its last wringer washing machine. Maytag revolutionized many an American home 74 years ago when it came out with the first wringer washing machine — a model dubbed "Hired Girl." But automatic washers proved easier still, and today not even a price advantage remains to lore

the consumer to the wringer

The market for wringer washers peaked in 1948, when 3.4 million U.S.-made models were produced for domestic and overseas sales. Now it's down to 64,000, with an estimated 60 percent of the demand coming from abroad. Two companies intend to continue making the old-fashioned tubs. They are Speed Queen, a division of the Raytheon Co., and the Dexter Co., which says there still may be new markets in developing countries. Maytag's decision to discontinue the wringer washer has prompted about 50 letters and calls from customers who look back in nostalgia. "A number of people talk about how it's a much more intimate experience using these washers, getting their hands wet," said Susan J. Martin, a spokeswoman.

and vapor blocked the sun's light for years, the planet cooled severely and millions of plants died and the cold-hlooded dinosaurs were wiped out. Until now, evidence supporting the theory centered on the fact that meteorites contain a high level of the element iridium. Researchers have found a layer of rocks in Italy in which levels of indium are high enough to suggest they resulted from a sertling of meteoritic dust clouds rather from natural processes in the Earth.

The new study involves another element: osmium, particularly the varieties with atomic numbers of 186 and 187. In Earth samples, the ratio of osmium 187 to osmium 186 is about 10 to 1. But in meteorites. the ratio was 1 to 1. In testing samples from Colora-

South African Vote Bolsters Botha Referendum Seen as Mandate for Long Stay in Office

By Alan Cowell

New York Times Service JOHANNESBURG - Shortly after securing a convincing vote this week in favor of plans for limited reform, South Africa's prime minister, Pieter W. Botha, addressed the question of how he would deal in future with this country's black neighbors.

He reiterated his willingness to sign nonaggression pacts with them so that neither side might allow the other's foes to operate from its territory. But the conciliatory tone had an undercurrent of me "I'm speaking from a position of strength with them," he said of countries such as Mozambique, Angola and Zimbabwe. "And I hope they accept my good will."

In the light of South Africa's recent and regular military forays across some of its borders, the good will is ambivalent. But after vote on the reform proposals, there is nothing ambiguous about Mr. Botha's strength. Two-thirds of the two million whites who voted in the test of opinion came out in his favor, and while Mr. Botha bailed the outcome of referendum as a victory for South Africa, the political reality was that the vote reflected a large minister can now use as a personal mandate for a long stay in office. The reform plans, for which he assumed responsibility, were vindicated, thus blocking a challenge from white ultrarightists and tight-

The proposed reforms have been criticized by opponents because they make no provision for the 22 million blacks living within South Wednesday's referendum, in which the white electorate was asked to Africa's traditional boundaries and because they are seen as enshrini apartheid - the system by which people are compartmentalized by race. Yet through the splintered prism of South African politics, even proposing them was a hazardons gamble.

The notion of nonwhites having even a limited say in national afdegree of support that the prime fairs provoked severe division among the nation's 2.8 million Afrikaners — the white group of predominately Dutch heritage that has controlled South African politics since 1948. must have included many South Africans of British ancestry who would, by tradition, normally op-pose policies formulated by Mr. Botha and the Nationalists. By hlurring traditional voting patterns -albeit in a referendum and not in a general election - the suggestion among some commentators is that white politics has changed funda-mentally, with the benefits accru-ing to Mr. Botha.

That route is not included in the "new dispensation," for under the apartheid system, most blacks are required to live in "homelands," or nominally independent states. The number of urban blacks is growing rapidly, and white liberals and black leaders say that discontent among them after the referendum will lead to greater conflict with other racial groups. Mr. Botha evidently accepted the risk. At his news conference Thursday, the prime minister was asked to comment on whether or not the new constitution enshrined apartheid. The question did not please him, and throughout an impassioned reply, he avoided attering the word apartheid" himself, telling his questioner: "I do not know what you mean with your word: If it means oppression, I reject it. sharp and subtle as the finer etched blades sold that day. With that smiling self-control and sense of timing that had made him so fit for intelligence activity in the days of World War II, Hayward dictated entries in the catalog from his bed last February just before going off into a coma and dying shortly after. A man with an orderly mind and a sense of decorum, possibly because he had spent his life bending and twisting conventional rules, Hayward must have felt it was a decent thing to do to his lifetime collection and to Sotheby's, where he spent the latter part of his career as the expert on antique arms and armor, but also on rare and difficult objets d'art of the Middle Ages and Re-

Hayward was a man of multiple activities, eager to explore any neglected area, to detect the significance of the seemingly trivial and to step in wherever negligence could lead to damage. That is what induced him to collect World War I firearms as a boy when no one else did and one only had to bend to pick them up, sometimes literally, from junk heaps. That was also what made him so efficient first as an intelligence man, and later, in occupied Austria, as the British overseer in charge of historical

Hayward was the first English specialist to apply the methods of most extraordinary lot among the modern art history to firearms. A brilliant linguist, equally at ease in Italian, French, German, he may well have dérived his inspiration from the Germans, who were the first to take the subject seriously.

ONDON - On Nov. 1, the late He joined the Victoria and Aldispersed at a Sotheby auction, Leigh Ashton, had made up his mind that arms were not art and his museum needed no more than a reference collection. No general museum funds were available for

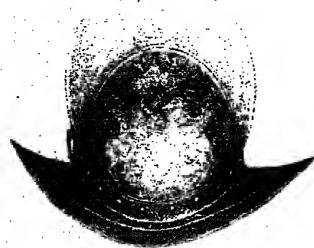

> To Hayward's agile mind, this was a minor obstacle. A handsome bequest of arms had been made to the museum before World War II, whose ambiguous provisions could be read as meaning that lesser-quality pieces could be sold to ac-quire better ones in the legatee's name. Hayward pounced on these clauses, to build up the departmental fund of the few hundred pounds required around 1950 to buy mas-

These were the days when extraordinary arms, remains of princely armonies and prewar col-lections, were being sold by owners hard pressed for cash. One of Hayward's many talents was a knack for establishing the right contacts. When a fabulous 16th-century south German gun surfaced, made by Peter Opel for one of the Fuggers, with a stock inlaid with silver and staghom, Hayward was the first to get wind of it. He bought it through his friend, Hans Schädelman, the leading German dealer in

All along, Hayward was busy with his second full-time job: collecting. With little money, but a flair for steering his affairs through the tising market of the 1950s and 1960s, Hayward bought three, resold two, weeding out and improving his collection.

This helped him indulge in his third passion, art historical research. Weapons were things to be director for whom he had no exag-bought, then studied and, where gerated regard is said by friends to deemed desirable, exhibited. The have precipitated his decision to blade carries the phony signature of a Spanish maker, "Sahagon," and the equally spurious inscrip-tion "Doletta" — a German mis-spelling for Toledo, the Spanish city famous for its blades. Both were executed by the 16th-century swordsmith himself: these princely pieces of stunning beauty would have been thought finer in their day as "Toledo" work than as mere Sometimes, Hayward would re-sort to barter. The masterpiece among the helmets sold on Tuesday was a German morion, decorated with etched scenes in the best Mannerist style of the 1600s. This once graced the collection of S.V. Grancsay, the American connois-seur who became curator of the Arms and Armor Department in the Metropolitan Museum and Hayward swapped another piece to get it. Last Tuesday, the helmet went through the preliminaries of flying back to New York: The Metropolitan Museum, hidding through an agent, got it for £37,910 ($56,865).

Not even such delightful pursuits were sufficient to make Hayward oblivious to the annoyance of civil service rigidity, particularly within the closed confines of a museum. The prospect of a new museum and probably enjoyed the best 18 years of his life. He saw more objects than ever, traveled all over Europe and the Western Hemisphere cataloging important collec-tions, and wrote his magnum opus, "Virtnoso Goldsmiths," the last word on Mannerist objets d'art and the role of designers. Published, of course, by Sotheby Parke Bernet. Did the far-seeing Hayward have the uncanny ability to pull strings even after his departure from this world? The crowning piece to the homage Sotheby's sale of arms and armor paid to his skills came immediately after the dispersal of his

Various arms of mixed provenance followed, some with highly exaggerated estimates and disproportionately flattering catalog entries. A typical lot, a "pair of flint-lock Pistols, a flintlock Carbine, and an additional flintlock Fowling and important Brescian sporting garniture" of the first quarter of the 13th century, ordered from Brescia by the Grand Duke of Saxe-Wei-

All of which is true except that they were not a "garniture," a set formed at the time, but merely arms from the same armory, which originally contained a great many such pieces, and probably ordered wholesale. The supposed "garniure," with a presale estimate of $40,000, was bought in at £16,500. A few other lots suffered a similar fate. Could this have been meant as a subtle way of enhancing Hayward's cataloging genius in keeping flattering descriptions within limfor a hearing.

"Cyrano de Bergerac," the mos: famous and popular French play of the last hundred years, has been packing the vast Mogador. Jacques Weber as the gallant Gascon of preposterous proboscis receives thunderous applause for each of his recitations of Rostand's multicolored effusions, and Charlotte de Turckheim is the Roxane who thrills to winged words. The production has been engineered by Jerome Savary, the "Magic Circus" man who delights in spoofing traditional concepts of history and literature with bawdy slapstick. He abstains from his customary high jinks on this occasion, for to burlesque this beloved romance would spell certain box-office failure.

Rostand's "Cyrano" in spirit is the ideal of every Frenchman, being, to borrow Mrs. Malaprop's metaphor, "the very pineapple" of perfection with his soul of hozor. his wit and whimsy, his courage in meeting all challenges and his jest-ing away of his tribulations. Savary has included some Big Top gym-nastics, but presents the characters without distorting devaluations.

Mirbeau's play, "Les Affaires sont les affaires," was a smashing shocker in its day, and its portrait of the captain of industry, an unscrupulous villain who employs anyone and every means to further his own purposes, has been approprinted by dozens of dramatists.

Pierre Dux has reproduced "Business Is Business" (as it was known in its English-language stag-ings) without a facelift at the Theatre du Rond-Point. The venerable script has little subtlety as it hangs home its message and its "wellmade" structure is passe. So is its moral-lesson climax, in which the shady financier is punished by the death of his adored soo and belatedly sees the emptiness of his

As the spoiled daughter of a noble house, she begins well, if a trifle harshly, as she tempts the mansion's outler to seduce her oo a festive midsummer night. In the scenes that follow her deflowering, her power is largely of the iungs and this adaptation alters the play's ending of suicide as she defiantly throws to the floor the razor her her throat. How she will subsequently solve her problem of disgrace is left to the spectator's imagination.

him, to tell the tale to the brim, is an Expressionist drive. This; however, is a minor considcration compared to one splendid certainty: de Pisis's flair for conveying the essence, the fragrance, the feel and texture of delectable live surfaces — of succelent fruit and shellfish, the skin of blossoms or young sailors - in a web of touches of paint that is very close to what Proust achieved with words.

First a poet involved in a new movement with de Chirico, Savinio and Carrà — de Pisis's studio in Ferrara was lined with shelves on which oested the most disparate objects, which he called his "metaphysical room," thus helping the movement get its name — he amused himself with constructing collages. Mixed Omens for Lebanon

It seems almost heroic of the Lebanese to be occupy. This issue could sink the conference, ving to put their country back together again, and with it the cause of Lebanese unity. trying to put their country back together again, as they have set out to do in Geneva. The parties deserve immense respect just for entering the same room. Their quick agreement on a statement asserting Lebanon's independence and Arab "identity" - a statement implicitly oggating both Phalangist and Islamic fundamentalist notions - was a good omen.

The other omens, of course, are oot good. Amin Gemayel came to Geneva not as the duly recognized president of a sovereign state but as the head of one faction. He is being called upon to assert a Lebanese national interest in some considerable tension with the traditional sectarian interest of his community, whose leader is his father. His community faces a loss of privilege and status, and it fears being overwhelmed. There can be no more painful exercise than to redistribute power in a country that has been racked by a savage civil war perhaps only temporarily stilled. The immediate battleground is the May 17 security and normalization agreement between Israel and Lebanon. Israel got the United States to agree that the pact need not go into effect unless Syrian and Israeli troops were withdrawn in tandem, and Syria, which was not consulted in its drafting, refused to go along. The Syrians, who occupy eastern Leba-non, arrived in Geneva to demand that the accord be renounced. The Israelis then threatened to seal off southern Lebanon, which they

We would say this about the May 17 agreement. Those who negotiated and brokered it did so in good faith; understandably, their prestige is involved. But what Israel extracted. with American blessing, from a weak Lebanese government reflected what realistic Israelis knew would be intolerable to the underrepresented end of the Lebanese political spectrum. Early respect for the pact's full terms is inconsistent with the goal of Lebanese unity.

The Syrians have a long way to go to demonstrate that they do not simply want to keep the beat on, outlast a tiring United States, and absorb Lebanon. But the Israelis must ask whether they will not sooner get the neighborly relations they want and deserve by compromising on the May 17 pact.

Meanwhile, American policy wobbles, One element of it would accept the parallel pleas of the Lebanese government and Israel to use the Geneva talks for confrontation with the Soviet Union, its headstrong client Syria and the Lebanese factions that look to Damascus. A second element would seek to test Syria's murmured interest in moving a step farther away from Moscow and in allowing Lebanon to settle down. The key question is whether the Reagan administration has the political opening, inclination and skill to make good on its intention to help Lebanon become Lebanon.

A Tough Time Ahead for Grenada

KINGSTON, New Jersey — Gre-nada was one invasion the United States can justify. But it was also the culmination of a three-year policy of confrontation that helped undermine the stability and the civility of the government whose people now are being rescued. And it may be the prelude to a difficult - not a speedy transition to democracy.

Motives aside, the invasion was humanitarian. The best evidence suggests that on Oct. 19 thousands of Grenadians, risking their lives - soldiers fired on them - marched through the capital and freed their popular leader, Prime Minister Manrice Bishop, from house arrest. Shortly afterward, General Hudson Anstin's troops seized and executed him, When it became clear that the Austin regime would soon become entrenched, leaders of eastern Caribbean democracies asked Washington's help. U.S. forces moved quickly; a later invasion would have involved unacceptable casualties.

Over the past three years, the U.S. government has waged relentless economic and psychological warfare against Grenada. In the process, the very Grenadian leaders who had committed themselves to democratic participation and a mixed economy er international institutions.

By Michael W. Doyle

1979, the United States coexisted cozily with the heavy-handed regime of Sir Eric Gairy. But Mr. Bishop, who came to power in a nearly bloodless coup that produced island-wide rejoicing was not similarly favored. Contacts between Mannice Bishop and the Carter administration were wary; after Ronald Reagan took office, each side was party to a miniature cold war.

U.S. aid was cut off. In March 1981, the United States urged the Common Market to refuse financing for the international airport Grenada said it needed to develop tourism. The Grenadians planned an airport about the size of Barbados's — one suited to large jets. The old airport could handle only small inter-island planes. Washington said the new air-port, at Point Salinas, was uneconomical and designed for Cuban and Soviet military use. The Grenadians thus built the airport with financial aid from Algeria, Libya, Veneznela and some European nations, and with Cuban men and material. The United States also lobbied against called a Cuban puppet regime and a dangerous dictatorship. These de-nunciations helped chase away investors and scared off many tourists. Then, two years ago, a large U.S. fleet was assembled to churn the waters around Cuba, carrying a none-toosubtle message for Grenada as well. And American forces staged a practice amphibious landing directed against two mock airports and the mock capital of a tiny tropical islet.

Washington cannot be blamed for the brutal coup by Bernard Coard, Mr. Bishop's deputy prime minister, and General Hudson Austin. But U.S. economic and psychological warfare played into the hands of those in Grenada who wished to strengthen Grenada's Army, contributing to a sense of emergency that was used to justify delays in moves toward democratic governance. Last June, while attempting to re-pair relations with Washington, Mr. Bishop began to move toward democracy. When he announced for-mation of an electoral commission headed by an independent lawyer from Trinidad, hard-line elements around Mr. Coard probably felt threatened. They struck Oct. 14; Mr. Bishop and several of his supporters

Grenadians would welcome a transition to democracy, Indeed, Mr. Bishop's popularity at the time of the revolution was based in part on his promise to end corruption and police brutality and to introduce participa-tory democracy. This transition may not be easy. On the left, Mr. Coard and General Austin murdered some of the leading advocates of democra-cy in the Bishop government. On the right, the Gairy regime's collabora-tors stand discredited. Grenada has never had moderate politics.

While the U.S. Marines may have been necessary to rescue the island, they alone cannot bring democracy. The Grenadians might be encour-aged if the task of peacekeeping were turned over to military forces primarily drawn from neighboring Caribbean islands rather than to forces from other Commonwealth nations.

A political transition to democracy will require independent Caribbean observers who can guarantee Grenadian self-determination and bolster Sir Paul Scoon, the governor general. The United States already plans $3.47 million in aid for relief and restoration work. Allies of the United States distrus its motives and fear further invasions. America did not give Mr. Bishop time. It could not give it to Mr. Coard and General Austin. Today, the invasion looks good. If democracy encounters problems, it may end up looking worse.

The writer, an assistant professor of international affairs at Princeton Uni-versity, is writing a book on North-South relations. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

A Prudent Wave at Poland

With a measured step toward easing sanc-tions, the Reagan administration properly begins to extricate itself from mostly empty protest against repression in Poland. Conceivably, such cautious moves can gain leverage for real influence over Polisb affairs.

In proclaiming sanctions two years ago, President Reagan said they would stand until Warsaw ended martial law, freed all political prisoners and found accommodation with the Roman Catholic Church and the free union movement, But martial law has ended in name only. Political prisoners still oumber 2,000. Free unions are but a memory.

Nevertheless, American companies may now discuss new Polish fishing rights, and Washington will join discussions about re-scheduling Poland's debts. Neither step concedes much. Fishing quotas still require gov-ernment approval. The debt talks provide a forum for raising political questions and are occeded if Poland is to be made to repay anything. No new credits are envisioned

These are concessions to reality. America's mostly symbolic sanctions were pathetically inadequate to the declared ends. If economic favor can accomplish anything, it will be only through calibrated steps. By acting at a relatively calm moment, Washington avoids affront to still-resisting Poles. By hedging its moves, it hunts for some leverage.

The leverage could be greater if diplomats rather than bankers became the main debt negotiators. That would require some kind of Treasury purchase, at a discount, of privately beld Polisb debt. Poland will long oeed foreign capital, and its prospects for repayment depend on political changes that private bankers cannot compel. Financial and political conditions are now intertwined in many dehtor nations. Given the administration's need for a policy and the Polisb government's unified control over ecooomic and policical affairs, Poland would be a good place to try something altogether new,

Other Opinion

South Africa's Referendum

The world, we can be sure, will not be greatly impressed by the oews Irom South Africa, which is that a large majority of whites voted for the inclusion of Iodians and [mixedracel coloreds at the level of national government. It will invariably be ooted (and oot improperly) that the country's 22 million blacks will continue to have no role under the new constitution.

But if the result seems a slight affair to the outside world, its effects within South Africa are incalculable. It is the first evidence we have that most white South Africans oow realize that they have on God-given monopoly of political power. Assuredly it is still rather a dim realization for it does not extend to hlacks, who make up some 70 percent of the population. On the other hand, it is oot a realization which would have been possible even five years ago.

- The Daily Telegraph (London). More than 80 percent of the population is desperate for change. No more signals are occded for any government that genuinely seeks reform. [Prime Minister Botha] knows that real reform is now politically possible, so far as his own constituency is concerned, and essential for the nation as a whole. - The Johannesburg Star.

The Grenada(s) of Tomorrow

Between the abolition of outright colonial status in 1951 and the coup of 1979, there have been eight elections in Grenada under universal suffrage, and a fairly stable two-party system had emerged. During that period Grena-dian legal and political elites had participated in processes as varied and complex as the creation of a West Indies federation, an attempted unitary statehood relationship with Trinidad and Tobago, and the transition to national independence.

The people with experience and patriotism are there, and the governor general has the anthority to work with them. So the last thing that the United States should try is the estab lishment of any sort of protectorate or guard-ianship over Grenada, Such efforts in Cuba, the Philippines and Puerto Rico after the Spanish-American War should warn Americans about the dire consequences of anything except total political independence. - Anthony P. Maingot, a citizen of Trinidad and Tobogo and director of the graduate pro-gram in international studies at Florida International University, in the Los Angeles Times.

The vast majority of members of the United Nations are dictatorships. The perversion of truth and the manipulation of a purely local majority of dictatorships at the United Nauons were both evident when the Grenada episode was debated at the General Assembly. The vote condemned the action, which has saved Grenada from a dictatorship and is clearly welcomed by Grenadians themselves. How ironic, then, that the majority of unelected dictatorial governments which voted to condemn the East Caribbean states and the United States called for early elections in Grenada - a privilege they deny absolutely or in all but name to their own citizens. The Western world has watched impotently while nation after nation bas become ruled by military dictatorships. [Grenada's] rescue should be welcomed, and fully consolidated. A more important task for the West now is not to feel bang-dog about this rescue, but to develop a coherent and multilateral approach to further rescues. From this small beginning, a strategic initiative should be seized.

- The Times (London) Prudence sometimes dictates that the form of international law must be sacrificed for the sake of that which the law is intended to accomplish: the protection of life and liberty and the maintenance of a democratic world order. In the end, international law depends for its continued existence on the strength of democracic nations, such as the United States,

Reagan May Have Been Wrong, but He Wasn't the First

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON — First the idea was to save the American students (whose peril was not easy to prove). Then it was to restore democracy to Grenada, a justification ich, if widely applied, would keep the United States busy all over the world. But wait, the administration said. Look at what to our otter astonisbment we found: Huge arms caches; a whole bunch of Russians and East Europeans; secret treaties tying Grenada to Havana and Moscow; a lot more Cuban worker-soldiers than had been expected.

So what the administration is saying is that no damage is done to the established world order by breaking and entering without a warrant (be yond the request of Grenada's eastern Caribbean neighbors) if you hap-pen to turn up a lot of unexpected. acriminating evidence. The real rea-500 the United States invaded Grenada, it turns out, was to find a reason for invading Grenada.

Small wonder that political opponents and pundits are finding it hard to wrap their minds around that proposition. So it is also easier to inderstand why they see in the Grenada power play proof positive of fundamental failings in Ronald Reagan's management of foreign policy. But a few words in mitigation of Ronald Reagan are in order. Whatever else may be distinctively wrong-headed about the Reagan foreign po-licy, his handling of Grenada does before his assassination, was seized upon by Lyndon B. Johnson, when be not so much set a new and dangerous precedent as it follows an old and all too familiar tradition. For those who would hang the Resgan foreign policy in effigy, Grenada is the wrong rope. The charges are that he had no cause that met even the loose require-ments of international law; that his pretexts were firmsy, if oot false; that needlessly antagonized allies and Congress by failing to consult; that he suppressed the press.

In search of a little perspective, one could start with Harry Truman's handling of Korea, a military mission for which Mr. Truman could not even find a word until a reporter's question provided him with "police ac-tion" as a handy cuphemism for "war." Dwight D. Eisenhower invoked his own Doctrine as grounds for landing U.S. forces in Lebanon in 1958. But he never could produce the evidence to meet the Eisenhower Doctrine's test: that Lebanon was facing an external threat from a Mid-die East country "under the control of international communism." John F. Kennedy established as a fundamental of American foreign policy that the United States could not tolerate "another Cuba," That pronouncement, in Florida one week upon by Lyndon B. Johnson, when be embarked two years later on the U.S. invasion in the Caribbean that most closely resembles the Reagan operation in Grenada.

In the Dominican Republic in the spring of 1965, as in Grenada, a case could be made for the landing of American troops for the surgical removal of American citizens. The U.S. Embassy in Santo Domingo so recommended. What had begun as a civil war in large part simed at restoring a democratically elected government had reduced the Dominican Republic to anarchy. Undoubtedly, communist elements were actively exploiting the anarchy.

But President Johnson couldn't prove it. He needed a less controversial purpose, in the interests of seek-ing a symbolic overlay of approval by the ever-hesitant Organization of American States. The right-wing Do-minican junta had invited him to intervene - but in hysterical terms, claiming the revolution was communist-directed and would indeed produce "another Cuba" in the abs of "unlimited and immediate U.S. assistance." President Johnson played it cute. He ordered the U.S. Embassy to get the junta's invitation strictly to the safety of Americans. That way the American troops would be on hand and the option would be open to use them against whatever communist threat might materialize. But there would be no damning evidence in the record that Mr. Johnson had responded to a threat he could not document.

Later, the U.S. forces, more by happenstance than by design, did find themselves serving as a useful buffer. The fighting died away. Di-plomacy ultimately produced a care-taker government which, in turn, led to elections and a surprisingly longlived restoration of democratic process in the Dominican Republic.

If Ronald Reagan can do as well by bringing in British Commonwealth police forces to oversee the reconstruction of democracy in Grenada. today's pillorying may turn to ap-plance. That would still not validate his means or the confusion of his ends - no more than it would be an endorsement of the methods of his edecessors. But however you may feel about Ronald Reagan's particu lar approach to the conduct of for-eign policy, there is very little that is iquely Reaganesque about his handling of Grenada.

France and the U.S.: The Friction Now Comes From Cooperation

PARIS - Just days after French soldiers and American Marines - part of the same peacekeeping force — had died in near-ly simultaneous attacks in Beirut, the French were condemning the U.S. invasion of Grena-soviet military strength has brought the two same peacekeeping force - had died in nearda. The same mixture of cooperation and irritation has characterized the relationship between Washington and Paris almost since François Mitterrand was elected president here in May 1981.

The initial surprise and apprehension in the United States over the victory of a Socialist president in France — and his decision to take Communist ministers into his government - has receded. France's new firmness toward the Soviet Union and the continuity of its foreign policy reassured America.
France, while changing, has remained steadfast. The personal understanding between President Reagan and President Mitterrand, two very different men, belped facilitate U.S.-French rapprochement. The French and American administrations were so aware of the differences in their economic and social weltanschauung, so conscious of the need to preserve a stable relationship, that they dealt with each other more tactfully than they might have otherwise - even if the traditional bickering has gone on Strategic considerations have formed the basis of a renewed and more intense French-American relationship. Mr. Mitterrand's France has not become Atlanticist, nor bas the United States endorsed France's blend of Soviet military strength has brought the two countries closer. Common strategic concerns, however, cannot suppress tensions on such issues as the Western economic setting, Central America and East-West economic relations. The United States has been irritated by what it considers to be an idealistic French approach to Central America. The French, along with most other European countries, refused to associate themselves with a policy of economic sanctions toward the East bloc, whose efficacy and political cost they questioned. They also bristled under the weight of high U.S. interest rates and a strong dollar.

But if the bases for agreement on strategic matters have not varied, the sources of tensions have changed. They no longer stem from opposing views but rather from a competitive partnership.

France, without modifying its fundamental views on Central America, has become more discreet and detached — even if it denounced unambiguously the Grenadian operation. The Reagan administration no longer seems to believe as firmly in the virtues of economic sanctions against the East. Paradoxically, it is on issues where the French and the Americans appear to be on the same side that frictions are most visible.

By Dominique Moisi

tions of Colonel Monmer Qadhafi, the Libyan leader, revealed to the Americans the exis-tence of Chad. The Americans then offered heavy-handed support that may have proved more politically burdensome than militarily effective. Paris, pushed by military, economic and bumanitarian considerations, and its vision of the "Arab policy of France," was more prudent in dealing with Libya and its allies than the Americans deemed necessary. France wants to preserve the credibility of its special relationship with Francophone Africa. It does not want to be the gendame of an anti-Oadhafi crusade In Lebanon, the United States is the principal political actor, despite France's historical anections. Neither the United States nor France seems to have a clear view of its objectives in Lebanon or, more globally, in the Arab-Israeli conflict, Paris and Washington share the same fear that they will become bogged down in a dangerous, inglorious mudpit; the same temptation of accommodation with Syria; and the same reluctance of appearing to support too closely a Christ partner at the expense of Moslem Arabs. But if events continue to accelerate there, mutual recriminations might result.

The Iran-Iraq war constitutes an immediate source of tension. Washington does not criticize France's diplomatic support of Iraq as such. The Americans were pleased, in the mid-1970s, with the rapprochement between Bagbdad and Paris, which allowed a Western presence in a country that had become seemngly too dependent on the Soviet Union. There was an implicit division of influence between the French in Baghdad and Americans in Tehran.

The fall of the shah, and the military ambitions of Iraq's Saddam Hussein, destroyed ilibrium. The United States has criticized the French sale of Super Etendard jets to Iraq, fearing a possible escalation of the Gulf conflict, but also because Washington wants to keep a door open toward Iran, which it still considers a key to the region.

These tensions

These tensions represent a source of unitation, but they cannot ultimately endanger the U.S.-French relationship. Conflicting eco-nomic interests, especially in agricultural matters, are more likely to cause long-term trouble. And if serious negotiations ever take place between Washington and Moscow on Euromissiles, the question of the inclusion of the French and British national nuclear forces could become a real "pomme de discorde between France and the United States.

Alfonsin's Victory Opens Doors for Argentina and Its Neighbors

WASHINGTON — If politics is the art of the possible. Argentina has just expanded the universe. For the election there last Sunday demonstrates that between the contending forces of anthoritarianism and radical nadonalism, there is room for a moderate center. The Argentine message applies throughout Latin America. It thus widens political choices available to Washington, and improves prospects for a safe exit from the deht crisis. Argentina is one of the world's stunted giants. It enjoys a temperate clime, an abundance of resources and a racially homogeneous population of immigrants from Southern Europe. It is self-sufficient in enexy. and exports food. Buenos Aires, a great city at the turn of the century, on the Brinsh model, was stuffy. The Perons, General Juan and his wife Evita, led a populist revolt against an old order that had been shaken by depression and war. They installed a welfare state with close ties to the labor unions and a strong touch of authoritarian rule. Consumers, thus subsidized, went on a spree. Within a decade, Argentias was on the verge of bankruptcy. To save the country from its profligacy, the middle class and the mili-tary joined forces, in 1955, in a coup that overthrew General Peron. There followed a regular seesaw of civilian and military regimes which amounted to what James Neilson of the Buenos Aires Herald called "a durable political order." "Military regimes" were "supposedly devoted to capital formation." "Populist governments" distributed whatever was "available to whomever their leaders" chose.

The Falklands war shattered the "durable order." Military leaders, already compromised by a campaign of murder, kidnapping and torinre against leftist opposition, were totally discredited by ignominious defeat. To get out from under this, they organized elections.

The Peronistas stepped forward to take over. But, with General Peron and Evita dead, and Isabel Perón discredited, the leadership was divided and weak. The unions had been corrupted in partnership with the military and damaged by their support for counter-terrorist tactics. Raul Allonsin, the leader of a classic middle-class party, the Radicals, boldly undertook a two-front campaign. He assailed the military leaders for buman rights violations and losing the war. He attacked the labor wing of the Peronists for corruption, and blamed it for rampant inflation. That appeal railied new voters, women and at least a segment of the working class. Contrary to all expec-tations, Mr. Alfonsin won an abso-inte majority. He still faces severe problems with runsway inflation. Indeed, one element in the tough and no date has been fixed for his manguration. But one difficulty has been eased. The so-called "inevitable majority" of Peronists and generals has been routed. Indeed, one element in the tough stance of the Reagan administration toward Central America is the belief that it will hold change to an orderly pace throughout the hemisphere. The message of Argentina is that the United States does not have to be so wary. Freer rein can be given to democratic politics. For there is a center in Latin America, and, with a little support from Washington, it just .

The debt crisis reinforces the point.

Argentina with debts of $45 billion, follows only Brazil and Mexico among countries in the red. A delicate program for working off the debts has been organized by the in-ternational financial community.

Scoffers have always claimed that radical nationalists would eventually thwart the program by organizing a default. With the Peronists waiting in the wings, Argentina shaped up as a prime candidate for the role of wrecker. But the presidential election, by repudiating the radical nationalists, shows that at the end of the international debt tunnel there flickcas a heht

American Work and Play Clothes Provide Profitable Design Inspiration

By Hebe Dorsey NEW YORK - America has a fashion — it is Americana — that reflects a caspal, relaxed way of dressing like wearing sneakers with evening wear or ski clothes to

People all over the world have been dressing this way without quite realizing that jeans and sneakers, jumpsuits and down vests, lumber jackets and Windbreakers, Indian ribbon skirts and mocassins all come from American folklore and the working class tra-

Button-down shirts with striped ties, crew-neck sweaters, tweed oafers - also known as the preppie look - belong to the American university campus. The country elub look is something else again. It is the mass revenge of conservative businessmen who all week have had to go around in white or pale blue shirts, dark snits, black socks and black shoes. Come the weekend, they fall into the other extreme and adopt the brightest and wildest color combinations, such as Kelly green pants or those in outlandish plaids or prints, orange Lacoste shirts, stockingless Gucci loafers, navy blazers and ascots or club ties. Sports and health are the latest influences from the United States, resulting in all kinds of garb for athletics, the locker room or the dance studio, such as leotards, jog-ging suits, running shoes and ballet dancers' leg warmers. Next week Jane Fonds will show workout clothes designed by Theoni Aldredge, who designed the costumes for Broadway's "La Cage aux Folies." "A Chorus Line," "Dreamsiris" and "42d Street." Not so at Lord & Taylor, which, to this day, is noted for pushing the American image and beritage. We're an American store which flowers in bringing forth young American talents," Catherine di Montezomolo, the store's vice president and fashinn director, said. We buy from Europe, we buy from the Far East, we buy from all over, but we put our emphasis on American designers. It started in the '40s," she added, "when Dorothy Shaver was president of the store. She encouraged everyone to promote and develop talented American designers which resulted in the introduction of Claire Mc Cardell, Bonnie Cashin, Sally Victor, Tom Brigance, Lins Estevez, Vera Maxwell, Ann Fogarty, John Weitz, Rudi Gernreich, Donald Brooks and Bill Blass." And in 1945, according to the fashion director, the store even coyprighted the expression "The American Look," defining it as, among other things, "that proud air of independence, that fresh, shining look. ..."

For women seeking that look, there is an area at Lord & Taylor where 90 percent of the merchandisc (designed exclusively for this store) in a rustic, atmosphere set off by cozy pinewood and copper. spinning wheel and area rugs. The store also regularly promotes the Americana look through romantic and deliberately folkloric images. "Once a year, we have a big promotion when we salute one area of America or annther," Mrs. di Montezomolo said. "We've had the Gibson girl, Nantucket and Santa Fe. This year, it was Newport - its gracious coaching tradition, tea dances, marvelous, romantic white

The store's most successful American designer is Ralph Lauren, "Ralph is totally American in his spirit, philosopby and way of life. He is also probably one of the most important of America's designers," she said. Lauren has built a $450 million empire on Ameri-

PARIS - The mutual attraction of the elegant European aristocracy to substantial American money has often resulted in a beau marriage. It is a tradition that nowadays is as faithfully followed in the hardheaded world of Due and Bradstreet as it is among the rarified reaches of the Almanach du Gotha (bible of European bluebloods) and some of the most brilliant matching strategy, but the new relationship with Max Factor the noblesse of French perfumes and the super-rich U.S. industrial powers and conginmerates.

Financial fidelity seems just as fickle as the romantic kind, so finding out who is with whom can be almost as tricky as a gossip columnist sniffing out the latest jer-set spbt. When the links are eventually traced, one discovers some combinations every hit as original as the Texas cattle baron's daughter and the son of the French duke.

The heady scents of Yves Saint-Laurent's exouc Opium, Y. Rive Gauche and his latest launch, the rose-based Paris as well as his Kouros for men, for example, are owned by the more presaic U.S. corporation Squibb through its subsidiary, Charles of the Ritz. Karl Lagerfeld's best-selling Chloe, KL, and Lagerfeld for Men, belong to conglomerate Eli Lilly. by way of its offshoot, Elizabeth Arden, which also markets the spin-off fragrance from the English lassic, Burberry. A.H. Robins controls the Caron perfumes: Nocturne. Infini. Fleurs de Rocaille. Eau de Caron and Caron for Men. among others while Pierre Balmain's Ivoire belongs to Revion along with other Balmain perfumes Jolie Madame, Miss Balmain, Vent Vert, Monsieur Balmain and Ebène. Also sheltering under the Reviou umbrella are the products of Jeanne Gatineau.

American Cynamid may seem an unlikely mate, image-wise, but along with its subsidiary Shulton, famous as makers of perennial Old Spice, it harbors Parfums Prestige International - the Pierre Cardin perfume company with its Cardin. Choc. Paradoxe and Pierre Cardin for Men, and American designer Geoffrey Beene's Grey Flannel. The U.S. giant, Pfizer owns Coly and thus L'Aimant, Quotidienne, Cordon Vert and Eau de Chypre.

Paloma Picasso's alliance with Warner Communications subsidiary Warner Cosmetics for her new perfume named after herself, is perhaps more in the glamorous Hollywood tradition of an Alv Khan-Rita Hayworth romance. Warner's perfume stable also includes the thoroughbred Gloria Vanderbilt scent and Ralph Lauren's Polo. Chaps, Lauren and Tuxedo. Like some blueblooded family trees, corporate marriages and takeovers can become complex. The French beauty group Orlane and its toilet waters, Fleur for women and Derrick for men, and Jean d'Albret, with Ecusson and Princesse, are owned by the U.S. corporation Norton Simon, which also owns cosmetic firm Max Factor and the perfume of the New York designer Halston.

Maria, along with their line of hair and beauty-care products are owned by a superconglomerate, Esmark, through its subsidiary Playtex. In September, Esmark took over Norton Simon which makes for some interesting relationships Carita beauty products are not yet sold in the United States, and Carita directors will not be drawn on makes it seem likely.

"It is about 90 percent certain," said Jean-Jacques Bacilieri, director of Cosmetic Research, a French market research company. He notes although "the United States is tops in makeup, it is about 10 to 15 years behind the Europeans in beauty care products.

Some arrangements are more of a liaison than outright matrimony though intentions may be serious. Louis Ferraud's Fantasque and Fer are under contract to U.S. market leader, Avon, which also owns Mallinckrodt, an American producer of perfume oils and essences. Nina Ricci's fragrances — the eternal L'Air du Temps (now strongly back in fashion, Mr. Bacilieri said. as subtle new florals take over from overpowering spicy Orientals.), Capricci, Farouche. Fleur de Fleurs and Signoricci 2 (for men), are distributed in the United States by an American Cynamid subsidiary, Jacqueline Cochran, named after the pioneer aviaurix. "If these perfume companies should come up for sale, the distributors might be thought to bave a prior option, Mr. Bacilieri said.

The very solid basis of these relationships is, not surprisingly, monev. The cost of launching a new perfume, estimated at more than $8 million in promotinn alone, calls to Fortune magazine. Gillette (which incidentally owns the French manufacturer of that most coveted of status symbol cigarette lighters, S.T. Dupont) spent $23 million last year to lauoch a shampoo on the U.S. market.

In terms of market size, the United States comes first, Japan second. with Germany third and France fourth, but Mr. Bacilieri pointed out that the German and French markets combined come second to the U.S. and ahead of Japan. Sadly, financial marriages, like their romantic counterparts, do not always last ever after, and although there is no alimony, there is sometimes acrimony.

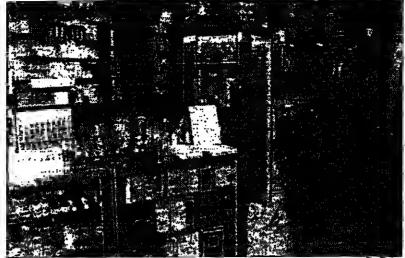

Designer Karl Lagerfeld, whose contract whith Chioè for ready-towear collections expires this year. told Woman's Wear Daily that he'd "simply never again work for an all-French Chloe....an American interest could make the company modern and efficient."

French socialite Jacqueline de Ribes whose up-market ready-towear collection was exclusively launched by Saks Fifth Avenue this year, is contracted to a U.S. company backed jointly by U.S. and foreign investors. Now she is reportedly being besieged by propositions to lend her name to a fragrance, but the Vicomtesse de Ribes demurs, saying only: "No decision has been Carita, the Faubourg Saint-Hon- taken. And I've always felt that ore hair salon started by the leg-endary Carita sisters, Rosy and certain discretion."

A Variety of Self-Improvement Courses Are Being Sandwiched into Lunchtime

By David Hinkley

NEW YORK - Considering that "Let's have lunch" has become the most insincere phrase in all of America, surpassing such perennial favorites as "I love your dress" and "I'll still respect you in the morning," it isn't too surprising that lunch itself has also become a victim of a society that cannot keep up with its own obsessions.

Luoch traditionally is the happi-est of meals. Breakfast ends before you are awake, dinner is when you hear what went wrong with someone else's day. But hinch, in the classic sense, is the day's first unrushed breath of air, the hlissful interlude when the figures on your desk can go uncalculated, the words unedited, the phones upanswered. To be coldly objective about it, the lure of lunch is the one and only reason that 90 percent of U.S. workers don't quit their jobs every single morning.

Today, however, lunch is an endangered species. Like the bluespotted salamander and the Colorado prairie dog, it may be unable to survive in a society that kills less hy willful design than hy simple

What is happening, simply, is this: Everyone seems to have discovered so many things they want to do, from aerobic gourmet cooking to dressing for success to programming software that will perform plastic surgery, that they are running out of time in which to do them. A microwave oven may save a few minutes at dinner, but it does not necessarily add up to an extra 60 minutes every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, which may be the only time the local night school offers that course on "How to Make Your Christmas Presents Out of Scrap Lumber and Dog

Licensing: The Base Supporting Empires

Blass makes fabulous evening clothes and great dinner suits and that his chubby double-winged initials appear on everything from sheets to boxes of fancy chocolates. But do they know that it is really "Bill Blass jeans" that supports the BB empire?

His countre line may create the koopla in the fashion press but it is the licensees that mean big

"Lots of people have $32 for jeans," Gail Levenstein, vice-president, licensee director for Blass, said. "But not $5,000 for a dress." The same goes for Calvin Klein. His grand entrance gowns with four-figure price tags may turn up on the covers of the hottest fashion magazines and the chicest parties in town, sometimes in embarrassing pairs. But it is the jeans that keep Calvin's own closet packed with expensive "low chic" muscle shirts and denims. "From a pure volume standpoint, jeans are the largest segment of the business that carries the Calvin Klein name," David Salz, vice-president and director of licensing for Klein, said. "And, if one dissected our products (there are 14 worldwide licenses in all), you would find that we represent the largest volume in each classification in the industry.

In fact, for almost any U.S. designer today, it is the licensee agreements that keep their empires affoat allowing them the luxury of dabbling artistically in their couture lines without too much fear that a misplaced ruffle, a hastily chosen color, will send them back to the starting line.

And, as the number of designer licensees proliferates, the financial importance of the ready-towear lines decreases significantly — or, so says Laughlin Barker, president of Perry Ellis International: The Perry Ellis sportswear division used to represent 80 percent of all our business. Now, it accounts for 40 percent of our volume—though it is still the largest division, since it is the first and oldest," he said. Meanwhile, Perry Ellis, with 12 worldwide licensees is hard at work on a fragrance that will hit the stores in the spring of 1985, men's and women's cosmetics, body treatments, and the most promising licensee of all —sheets by Martex - due in the stores this fall. Mr. Barker projects the sheet business to he the largest grossing licens-

Another new entry in the lucrative designer home furnishings business is Ralph Lauren - with a collection that includes four styles of home decor for dinnerware, table-top, bed and bath linens. wall coverings, blankets, rugs — that will deluge the stores in two years, but has already pre-booked $40 million wholesale for the first year. His men's wear division, the largest with a volume of $120 million, already accounts for 25 percent to 30 percent of the company's volume and keeps his

Peter Strom, president of Polo/Raiph Lauren
Fashlous, Inc. fondly calls the menswear licensee very profitable." And it is only one of 25 of his z. What to look forward to in fall 1984? Ralph Lauren athletic footwear, children's shoes

Only at Anne Klein and Geoffrey Beene do the sportswear divisions comprise the largest income volumes. "The ready-to-wear is most financially viable," Denter Levy, head of licensing at Anne Klein, said. "And the licensees that relate to clothes - except for jeans - do best, too. Almost 50 percent of our income is from ready-to-wear. Next in line of importance — bags and belts by Calderon that have done exceptionally well since their inception 15 years ago.

At Geoffrey Beene, "one of the leaders is the couture," J. Stanley Tucker, executive vice-president and chief operations officer, said. He also said that the three top licensees are the designer's fragrance for men - Grey Flannel - the moderately priced Beene Bag ready-to-wear division and the shoes produced by Andrew Geller. In a market that many designers call "disappointing," Beene's perfume has been growing dramatically for the ast couple of years" Mr. Tucker said. He attributed the success to the successful packaging that Beene designed himself before it became a licensee. Beene's latest endeavor, available this January, will be telephones. "He felt he could improve the design of the telephone because it doesn't have to he an ugly instrument that just sits there," Mr. Tucker said.

If after all this, designers with their dozens of licensees seem like spiders spinning filaments of "good taste" into every crevice of our lives — think again. The possibilities for licensees are endless, and there are many they have turned down.

What would the world be like if designers had said "yes" to dotting initials on such offers as: Ralph Lauren cheese or automotive parts, Calvin Klein records and birthday cards, Perry Ellis unicycles and bicycles, Anne Klein nutritional foods, vines, and chewing gum or Bill Blass coffins.

Free Election In Iran Urged By Bazargan

Leaders of Regime Claim He Serves Interests of U.S.

> By Paul Eedle Reuters

TEHRAN - A former Iranian prime minister. Mebdi Bazargan, has caused a political storm in Iran by charging that freedom is re-stricted and calling for guarantees that next year's general elections will be free and fair.

Revolutionary leaders have accused him and his Freedom Movement of Iran of insulting the Islamic Republic and serving the interests of the United States.

Mr. Bazargan was Iran's first prime minister after the Islamic revolution of February 1979, hus he resigned over the seizure of the U.S. Emhassy by militant students four years ago Friday.

After languishing in the political wilderness, he reappeared in August, still a member of parliament, with a speech to the assembly declaring that opposition in Iran was muzzled and calling for measures to ensure that the general elections due to be held in Fehruary or March will he free.

The speaker of parliament, Hashemi Rafsanjani, declared that the fact that Mr. Bazargan had been parliamentary debate hroadcast live on radio proved political free- office in 1981.

Ivory Coast's President Appears to Have Built Enduring Institutions

By Clifford D. May

ABIDJAN, fvory Coast - One day late last month, a gleaming white Concorde suddenly appeared in the skies over this West African capital. When it landed at Port-Bouët Airport a few minntes later, a small man in a buff-colored three-piece suit emerged and descended the steps to a long red Columns of soldiers and sailors froze to attention. A military band began to play, a cheering crowd waved small orange, white and Freedom Movement tried to orga- green flags, and a television announcer, his voice trembling, proclaimed: "The president is here! The president has arrived!"

In almost any other African country, such pomp to welcome back the head of state from a trip abroad might be viewed as an exercise in self-aggrandizement.

But here in the Ivory Coast, there appeared to be at least two justifications for the fuss. For one, President Félix Houphouet-Boigny is the George Washington of this na-tion, the man who has led it from independence through 23 years of stability and relative prosperity. For another, it had been nearly five months since Mr. Houphouel-Boigny had last set foot on his

In May, the president went off

cation during which he held talks with many of the most influential men and women in the United States, Britain and France. Few if any modern leaders bave left their bomelands for so long. "Few would dare to," said a senior Nigerian diplomat Government spokesmen bere do not deny that the president's prolonged absence was a bit unusual. but they stress that, above all, it should be viewed as a sign of the Ivory Coast's maturity.

"The fact that things didn't fall apart while be was away demonstrates that we bave some institutions that actually work," said Maurice L. Oulla, a Ministry of Information official. "It shows that we can manage without him." The prospect of having to manage without Mr. Houphouët-

Boigny has become a subject of concern in this nation of 8.6 million people. On Oct. 18, the president turned 78 (some believe he is, in fact, a few years older), and no one can say what would happen if he were to pass from the scene. According to the constitution adopted three years ago, the vice president is oext in line in the event of the president's death or disabil ity. But there is no vice president oow and there will not be one until elections are held in 1985.

"We are Africans, so we are opti-mistic," said Mr. Oulla, "We think our leader will be here at least until 1985. We trust the old man. He will find a solution for us."

Trusting the "old man," as he is affectionately called, became a hahit in the fvory Coast long ago. Born into a wealthy farming family in the village of Yamoussoukro, recently designated to become the country's new capital, Mr. Honphouet-Boigny was trained as a doctor and moved into politics in the 1940s, first as the founder of an agricultural union and then as one the founders of the African Democratic Assembly, the leading pre-independence party in French

West Africa. After World War II, he spent more than a decade in France as the Ivory Coast's representative in parliament and for almost three years be served as a minister in the French government. The Ivory Coast, which was established as a French protectorate in 1842 and then became part of the Federation of French West Africa in 1904 and an antonomous republic within the French Community in 1958, became independent in 1960.

Mr. Houphouet-Boigny, unlike some African leaders of the time, was a moderate both in word and deed, and at no time was he a critic of French colonial rule. After independence, he encouraged a close relationship with France, a relationship that continues.

The president's critics, more eas found abroad than here, accuse him of being a neocolonialist. His supporters counter that one only need compare the standard of liv ing in the fvory Coast with that in African countries that pursued more "independent" paths to development to realize the wisdom of Mr. Houphouet-Boigny's policies.

The president has also maintained political control without turning the fvory Coast into a police state. With few exceptions, disputes have been resolved through dialogues" between the president, his senior advisers and those harboring grievances.

Many other political, ideological and tribal quarrels have been safely contained within the forum provided by the Democratic Party of the fvory Coast, the country's only po-litical grouping. "We are 60 tribes in this country," said Mr. Oulla. "Bringing them all together in one party gives us a certain cohesive-

Within the party, he added, there is relatively open and lively political discussion. Beginning in 1980, voters were presented with a choice of candidates in local elections, and many incumbents were defeated. There is a system to fit every stage of development," said Mr. Oulla. "This is what works best for

No independent press presently exists here, but that, governme spokesmen say, is only because no Ivory Coast citizen with the resources has been willing to make the investment. French, American and other newspapers and maga-zines are freely sold in the country.

The state-run press expresses the president's views. Fratemité-Matin, the daily newspaper, runs the president's "thought for the day" on the from page each morning, and the television news starts off in similar fashion every night.

Mr. Houphouet-Boigny's thoughts, however, hardly appear the stuff of which revolutionary books are made. A recent one read in part: "Being responsible to lead the country toward well-being and progress, I must put aside all demagogy and speak only the truth."

Danger of Lending Cuts Is Breakdown Expected In International Credit, Trade Slump

N EW YORK — Walter B. Wriston, chairman of Cincorp, likes to quote a dictum of the economist G. Warren Nutter: "Good judgment comes from experience, and experience comes from bad judgment."

Banks, having lent prodigally to Latin American and other developing countries during the 1970s and early 1980s, are now scrambling to reduce their forcion exposure.

their foreign exposure.

The Bank for International Settlements, whose members include the central banks of most major industrial countries, reported last month on the foreign loans of private banks during the second quarter of 1983; "For the first time since quarterly data began to be collected in 1963, the second-quarter figures showed only a very marginal growth of international bank activity." Excluding the effects of ex-change rates, banks in the industrial countries increased their loans to countries outside their own arcas by less than half a percent in the second quarter. In current dollars, Western banks increased their assets in the developing countries by just $6 billion in the April-June quarter of 1983, compared with an increase of $67.1 billion in July-September 1982. And, allowing for inflation, the banks' foreign assets showed a small decline. Although there are as yet no fresher official data, the downtrend in leading to the Third World appears to have accelerated in the third

While some of that money will stay abroad, Mr. Knormski suggests that more realistic exchange rates, political stability and a newval of domestic markets would begin to bring some of the capital back.

The financial markets in the United States and other Western commiss.

The financial markets in the United States and other Western commess have been remarkably calm in the face of the international debt crisis.

This may be because the major banks, despite their heavy exposure in the limit of the control of the international debt crisis.

This may be because the major banks, despite their heavy exposure in the application of the international control of the international central banks would rescue major the expectation that their national central banks would rescue major onden of Thursday, banks to protect the system.

d Thursday, night, the Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, told the American Bankers Association conference in Honolula Oct. 10, "We have a strong safety net under our own banking system, as do other leading countries."

Banks Reminded of Role

But he did not want to be so reassuring as to make the banks neglectful of their continuing role as lenders to the developing countries. For he added that, however effective the central banks' help for banks would be "as a last resort," and however skillfully that fiscal and monetary policy might be conducted in a crunch, it would be an "filmsion" to think that managers of big banks or small, domestic borrowers generally could "escape scot-free in the kind of environment implied by a breakdown of cases scottles in the kind of environment implied by a dreamown of international credit flows."

All of this was aimed at making the bankers recognize the importance of restoring normal credit flows. "Grand plans set forth by some calling for massive injections of new governmental assistance and across-the-board forgiveness of some debt and interest simply are not negotiable."

Mr. Volcker said.

Nevertheless, the bankers are cutting back their foreign lending to be on the safe side. And, with the central bank safety net intact, the real danger is not a collapse of the banking system but a breakdown of international credit and a trade recession.

The United States is especially affected by that threat, because its ratio of exports to developing countries outside the Organization of Petroleum New York Stock Exchange were Exporting Countries —31.8 percent in 1981 — is higher than that of any down broadly in slow trading Friends industrial country.

"Our exports to these countries have fallen by 46 percent between the "Our exports to these countries have fallen by 46 percent between the first half of 1981 and the first half of 1983," observes Edward L. "Our exports to Mexico have fallen by 52 percent in the same period. The depression in the non-OPEC developing countries has had a much greater adverse effect on our exports than the appreciation of the dollar."

The need to sustain bank lending and the flow of private investment to developing countries is thus crucial not only to their economic well-being but also to that of the United States. And the political fallout from economic disasters in the Third World could also come down on the United States.

Japanese Car Knock-Down Sets Skirt Countries' Limits on Auto Shipments

Further Rise in Market Share of Parts Appears Inevitable

By Steve Lohr New York Times Service

TOKYO — Although Japanese exports of assem-bled automobiles, limited by foreign restrictions, de-clined 8 percent last year and remain stagnant this year, exports of cars shipped as parts to be assembled overseas are using rapidly.

Last year, during the recession, exports of these so-called knock-down sets advanced about 12 percent. And for the six-month period that ended in September, the number climbed almost 30 percent from the comparable period a year ago.

Because the United States did not have any restrictions on Japanese auto imports until 1981, when a three-year restraint agreement was signed. Japan had no reason to send the sets to the United States until then. But because the sets are not counted as exports for the purposes of the agreement, the situation has now changed.

A fourth year of the agreement, which was signed earlier this week, sets a new quota of 1.65 million cars, up from 1.68 million during the previous 12 months. BONN - In a major West German corporate failure, IBH Holding, the giant construction machine group, said Friday that it had asked for a court receiver to protect it from its creditors.

Horst-Dieter Esch, the IBH chairman, said difficulties at Schröder, Münchmeyer, Hengst & Co., the private bank that was bailed out by other German banks earlier this week, prompted several of the company's creditor banks to severe credit lines.

Creditors, World Bank Tentatively Set Aid Plan of $530 Million for Morocco

PARIS (AP) - Western creditors and the World Bank have tentatively agreed to provide Morocco with an aid package of 500 million Special to at least $6 million The amount is less than the $700 million that Morocco had sought of new policies. from Western governments. But officials at the International Monetary Fund, which led the debt discussion Thursday, said participants believed that the sum would be enough to help Rabat overcome problems in its current account. The current account is a broad measure of a nation's trade in merchandise and services.

The new aid accord is one of several measures that Rabat is undertaking to combat a severe current account deficit expected in 1983 and 1984. Although some bankers have put Morocco's current account deficit as high as $2 billion this year, the IMF believes that it will amount to about $1.1 billion in 1983 and $1.3 billion in 1984.

Manila Orders In All Foreign Exchange

MANILA (AP) - The Philippines central bank ordered the nation's banks Friday to sell all their foreign exchange to the government bank.

The action means that Filipinos will no longer be able to buy U.S. dollars legally to send abroad or for travel and that businesses will no longer be able to buy dollars from private banks for nonessential imports.

Prime Minister Cesar Virata said the requirement would be temporary to help the government buy oil and other priority imports and to pay off its more than $19-billion debt. He denied that the action amounted to nationalization of banks' trade-financing activities or that it was designed to bail out failing banks.

Machine-Tool Industry In U.S. Is Still Waiting For Recovery to Arrive

By Doug McInnis New York Times Service

DAYTON, Ohio - The U.S. ctonomy may be working its way out of the worst recession since the 1930s, but one would not know it by looking at that small but most basic of businesses — the machine-shape their own products, are desperate for orders.

The primary reason is that maning customers, as is typical at this stage of an economic recovery, are operating well below ca- are typical of the industry. pacity. So they do not need many new machine tools.

That is why William Jenkins, general manager of Vulcan Tool Co., was more than willing to restructure his plant to get a $2-million military order last year.

Mr. Jenkins's men moved the huge horizontal I-beams at the east Dayton workshop to make room fer construction of the six 100-footlong, 16-foot-high machines that will be used to assemble launching tubes for the Air Force's MX mis-

The resulting diversification into tools for the aerospace, petroleum, and plumbing and electrical manu-facturing industries looked good for awhile. Then the recession reached those sectors.

Vulcan survived by its one unique product: a device that shears metal tubing with no waste. Foodstuffs Import and Export Corp., said in an interview that at Mr. Jenkins, the general manager, estimates that Vulcan's customers save from one-sixteenth to oneeighth of an inch on each shear. Over time, that savings can pay for the cost of the machine.

Canada Unemployment Falls

OTTAWA - Canadian unem ployment, seasonally adjusted, fell to 11.1 percent in October from 11.3 percent in September and 12.7 percent in October 1982, Statistics Canada said Friday.

Floating Rate Notes

A U.S. Department of Agricul-ture official in Beijing reacted by saying that the Chinese position was in breach of the agreement. So far this year, according to the latest available figures from the Department of Agriculture in Washington, China has bought 3.8 million metric tons of grain, 2.42 million tons of it in wheat and 1.38

Sales for 1984 shipment so far total 450,000 metric tons of wheat. Under the pact, 15 to 20 percent of Chinese purchases must be in corn. The two sides are due to discuss the issue next month in Washing-

German Currency Reserves

FRANKFURT - West German net currency reserves declined by 2.7 billion Deutsche marks ($1.02-billion) in the final week of October, to 68.8 billion DM, the Bundesbank said Folday. The drop followed a rise of 700 million DM in the previous week.

By Alice Walker. 397 pp. $14.95. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 757 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Reviewed by Octavia E. Butler

Walker says in this collection of essays. reviews and lectures, "that to know ourselves as we are, we must know our mothers' names. Yet we do oot know them. Or if we do, it is only the oames we know, not the lives."

Walker has written a book of, among other things, names and lives — a book that examines aspects of her search into the past and present of black women. These writings stretch from 1966 through 1982 and examine the lives of women from Rebecca Cox Jackson, a 19th-century evangelist, to writer-anthropologist Zora Neale Hurston to Coretta Scott King to Walker's mother - she of the garden in the title.

But this is not a book of biographies. It is, according to the cover, a book of "womanist" prose. Womanist means "a black feminist or feminist of color. From the black folk expression of mothers to female children, 'You acting womanish,' i.e., like a

DENNIS THE MENACE

When Walker writes about one of the names, one of the lives she has chosen, sooner or later we see how her subject has touched her. She reviews "Second Class Citizen," a novel by Nigerian writer Buchi Emecheta, and discusses the apparently comfortable way Emecheta balances motherhood and authorship. For instance, Emecheta dedicates her book to her children and their "sweet background ooises," Walker comments: "What kind of woman would think the 'background noises' of five children sweet? I thought the dedication might camouflage the author's unadmitted maternal guilt, but Emecheta is a writer and a mother, and it is because she is both that she writes at all."

In an essay titled "One Child of One's Own," Walker discusses her decision to be both a writer writers, was terrified of having children. . .

and a mother, "It is perfectly true," she says, "that I, like many other women who work, especially as thought the quality of my work would be considera-bly diminished by motherhood." But after further thought she says, "In my opinion, having a child is easily the equivalent" of being a man. "In truth, it is

Solution to Last Week's Puzzle

An examination of "The Divided Life of Jean Toomer" brings Walker to the related subjects of racism and black-to-black colorism. Toomer, "the man who wrote so piercingly of 'Negro' life in 'Cane,' chose to live his life as a white man, while Hughes, Hurston, Du Boie, and other black writers were celebrating the blackness in themselves as well that he chose, perhaps rightly, to accept his mirror's version of things. Walker also examines the other end of the spectrum -darker blacks, darker women in particular — who find themselves condemned by lighter — skinned blacks for no reason except color and perverse historical precedent. Neither the Harlem Renaissance our the revolutionary '60s eradicated this problem. "To me," Walker says, "the black black woman is our essential mother - the blacker she is the more us she is — and to see the hatred that is turned on her is enough to make me spair, almost entirely of our future as a people."

"Ironically, much of what I've learned about color infinitely easier."

Zora Neale Hurstoo was more than one of Walker's collection of names and lives. For a time in 1973, 13 years after Hurston's death, Walker became her "niece." In "Looking for Zora," Walker details her Florida search first for people who knew Hurston, then for Hurston's unmarked grave. Walker passed berself off as Hurston's niece and found what may or may not be the grave and marked it. As for the lie: "as far as I'm concerned, she is my aunt

Other topics Walker examines range from the threat of nuclear war to making movies to the writing of "The Color Purple." They occu not be read all at once like a novel or even read in order. They come together — 16 years of womanist prose.
They exemplify growth, occasional disillusionment and bitterness, occasional unrealistic optimism, but basically thoughful common-sense writing of a kind that might once have been called bumanist before that word was pushed into disrepute.

Octavia E. Butler is the author of "Kindred" and the forthcoming "Clay's Ark." She wrote this review for The Washington Post.

U.S. Leads Britain In Wightman Cup

By Karhy Blumenstock Washington Post Service

WILLIAMSBURG, Virginia Martina Naviatilova had anticipated "close matches" against Britain's team in the Wightman Cop. but if Thursday night's opening round results are any indication, the United States' domination of the opposition, now at 44-10, is in no danger. Navratilova took her first singles match over Sue Barker, 6-2, 6-0, in just under an hour, and Kathy Rinaldi needed only slightly longer to dispose of Virginia Wade, 6-2, 6-2, to give the United States a 2-0 lead.

Although Navratilova had said she expected to be pervous while competing for the United States, and conceded that she did experience some nervousness, tension affected Britain's players far more adversely.

"I was very emotional after the opening ceremonies." Barker said, and when you know you'll be playing someone as strong as Marina, you do get very nervous. You almost feel you have to play so much above yourself when you

But in reaching above her level, Barker experienced difficulties that began in the first game of the open-ing set, when she double-faulted twice as Navratilova easily broke

"I don't think the pressure bothered me," Navratilova said. "I'm expected to win and I like the responsibility."

It was Navratilova's first appearance on the U.S. Wightman Cap team and only the second time that she has represented the United States. "Just being here," she said, not finishing the sentence. "You see the flags up there every time you hit an overhead shot. It's like a dream come true."

For Wade, captain of the British team, her match was hardly that. Pleading fatigue from a recent Middle East trip and admitting she was not as fit as she could be. Wade was clearly overpowered by Rinaldi, whose superior serves belied her first appearance in Wightman competition.

Wade has been here before, and if Navratilova's result was expected, even predicted with assurance Wade was supposed to come through for the British.

"I hate to talk about pressure, but they're [the United States] in such a habit of winning, it's so hard for us to break that pattern," she said.
"And now that I've gotten us in this hole, it's more pressure on Jo Durie] when she plays Pam [Shri-verf" on Friday night. In the other match Friday, No. 2 U.S. doubles team of Pania Smith and Candy Reynolds was to meet the British No. 2 team of Wade and

The British have not won the competition since 1978, and earlier in the week Wade called for the achsion of European players in the competition as a way of reviv-ing U.S. interest in the event, Renters reported.

"We could mount a genuine: challenge by including the Europe-ans," said Wade, a 38-year-old vet-eran making a record 19th appear-ance in the Wightman Cup. "Although we could always reserve a spot in the team for an English

The event began in 1923 as an annual series between the top U.S. and British women tennis players. Wade also recommended a permanent venue for the event in the United States, which stages the competition every two years. London's Royal Albert Hall has become the traditional setting in Britain, while the event has been witched from California to Florida to Chicago and now to the 8,000-seater basketball arena in Williamsburg.

SPORTS BRIEFS NHL's Lysiak Gets Reprieve From Ban

CHICAGO (AP) — A circuit court judge granted a 10-day temporary restraining order Thursday allowing Chicago Black Hawks center Tom Lysic toplay hockey despite a 20-game suspension levied by a National-

Hockey League referee.

But Gilbert Stein, the NHL vice president and general counsel, said the league could still move to suspend Lyank under a different rule allowing league President John Ziegler to take such an action "at his discretion... for any offense committed during the course of the game or any aftermath thereof."

Lysiak was suspended under a regulation aimed at preventing abuse of game officials. He had upended a linesman during last Sunday's contest against Hartford. The emergency bearing before Judge George A. Higgins concluded an hour and a half before Lysiak played for the Black Hawks against Detroit. In addition to a temporary restraining order preventing the NHL from enforcing his suspension, Lysiak's suit asked the court to prohibit the NHL from suspending any other players under the rule originally invoked. Larry Latto, a lawyer for the NHL Players Association, has said rule violated the league's collective bargaining agreement.

NEW YORK -- The New York Yaukees and free-agent Graig Netties came to terms on a new contract Thursday night, just beating the midnight deadline to keep the third baseman from going through the re-entry draft.

Both the Yankees and Nettles' agent, Jerry Kapstein, confirmed the agreement. Kapstein said they came to terms one hour before the longer were allowed to talk contract with players who have filed to

Terms of the agreement were not announced, but Kapstein was reported to be seeking a two-year, $2 million contract for the 39-year-old Nettles, which would make him the fourth highest-paid Yankee behind Dave Winfield, Steve Kemp and Ken Griffey.

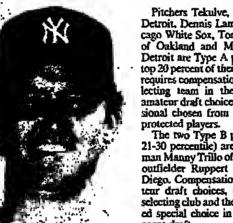

Nettles, who was in San Diego with Kapstein, said: "I was hoping things could be worked out, and they were. I didn't have any hesitation about going into the draft, but wanted a contract with the Yanknes. I wanted to sign with them. As a second resort, I would have gone through the draft."

But the Yankees failed to resign relief pitcher Goose Gossage and outfielder Oscar Gamble. Both will enter the re-entry draft, and neither is expected to resign with the club. Meanwhile, the Pittsburgh Pirates failed to prevent their top relief pitcher, Kent Tekulve, from ioining the free agent market. team said it made a "substantial" last-minute offer to Tekulve but the player turned it down Pirates spokesman Ed Wade said the offer to Tekulve, which was not disclosed, "would have made him the fourth-highest relief pricher in the major leagues."

"It's our understanding at this point that 'Teke' wants to go through the re-entry draft to see if there are better offers out there,"

He said, "I've been racing through airports all my life and it suddenly occurred to me that most terminals are now 26 miles long. Since people have to run to catch their places, there was no reasoo oot to have an airport marathou.

"I am amazed how many have shown up for it. We have competitors from terminals in Atlanta, Miami, Sao Francisco.

Buchwald London and Paris, and one team came all the way over from the Tokyo airport."
"How does a terminal airport marathon differ from the New York and Boston Marathons?" 1

"Ours is much more difficult because we require the contestants to run the 26 miles fully clothed, carring either an overnight case or a garment hag. The course is laid out as follows: Everyone starts from the curb. When the gun goes off they race up to the ticket counter, check in and then go to the gate where their plane is leaving from." Won't some contestants have shorter distances to run than oth-"No, that's the beauty of O'Hare airport. Every plane gate is exactly 26 miles from a ticket counter."

I talked to several of the contestants who were warming up in the parking lot. Husbands were rubbing wives' shoulders and wives were putting ointment on their spouses' legs. I was surprised to

Before I could interview anyone else, the gun went off and the First Airport Terminal Marathon was oo. The field was jammed as it begao, but ooce people went through the X-ray machines, it started thinning out. One FBI man got cramps in his legs and fell in front of Gate E-1, several got as far as the cocktail lounge before they began retching. Pilots, baggage handlers and porters cheered them on, and airline stewardesses provided Gatorade for those who lonked like they were about to drop. Every wheelehair at O'Hare was put in service to take off those who dropped from exhaustion. The winner turned out to be a traveling salesman, Jimmy Diamond from Rosslyn, New York, who got to his gate in 2 hours, 12 minutes and 4 seconds, beating out the Atlanta favorite. Jeff Harringwho works for Federal Express. Harrington might have won, but he claimed the woman at his ticket counter had sent him to the wrong gate.

I talked to Diamond after the race. He was in agooy and gasping for breath. I asked him if it was the toughest airport terminal race he had ever been in. He said, "No. I once bad to run from Piedmont to the Eastern Shuttle at National Airport, and I couldn't stand on my feet for two weeks."

The first lady to cross the finish line was Virgie Kessling of Doylestown, Pennyslvania. She was hardly puffing. "I'm an Avon lady sales rep, and I've been doing this for

What made the Chicago O'Hare race so inspiring was that the losers were just as exhilarated as the winners. As one contestant told me. "Just to have completed the 26 miles is enough glory for me. Running through an airport is the only prove he still has the right stuff."

litle Wynton his first trumpet

By Michael Zwerin tional Herold Tribine

PARIS — Wynton Marsalis — 22 years old, the great black hope - was sitting shirtless in jogging trousers on his trumpet case, earlier this week, eating a large salad in his hotel room.

His bair was trimmed, his eyes bright, he looked in fine physical shape. The night before, his quinici bad played the Paris Jazz Festival wearing suits and ties. There were two books on the table - a biography of Richard Wagner and Albert Murray's "The Omni-Americans" - and the sheet mnsic of the love theme from Superman, "You Can Read My Mind."

"I thought I might like to play that," he said, "but it sounds too much like 'Death and Transfiguration' by Richard Strauss." A four-valve piccolo trumpet, which he uses only for classical music, was unpacked on the bed. The night before, discussing Stravin-sky's "L'Histoire du Soldat" with his older brother Branford, who plays saxophone and shares the front line of the Marsalis quinter, he sang the famous trumpet solo from that chamber work, complete with double and triple tonguing; he is considering recording it.

It all adds up to an eclecticism that has little to do with the clicke finger-popping image the public has of a jazz musician. Is it just him, or have they changed?

"It never was that way. All the people I emulate, the really great jazz musicians like Bird and Diz and Monk were interested in many things. Bird could talk about anything, when be talked about painting people would think he was an artist. It has to do with the unconscious racism with which many whites look on black people, and it wasn't so unconscious at the beginning. They bave a certain stereotype that must be filled. America is trying to avoid dealing with the influence black people have on their culture. So only the negative aspects of it are stressed."

CBS, and they began to promote him hard. He currently has records on both the jazz ("Think of Marsalis played the Haydn One") and classical ("Haydn, Trumpet Concerto with the New Hummel, Leopold Mozart Trum-

In high school he was first trumpet with the New Orleans Civic Orchestra. He was accepted by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, at 17 - one year under the normal qualifying age. White people were shocked that a black kid could play their music so well. All the black kids he knew were frightened of "that big monster on the other side of the mountain. I wanted to find out what scared everybody so bad. I found out it's just another kind of music. To be a musician you cannot limit yourself just to classical, jazz or pop. The more music you know, the better musician you'll be." His father, Ellis Marsalis, is a saxophonist with a strong reputation in New Orleans. The pianist Marian McPartland first beard the children Wynton and Branford while she was in New Orleans. "I was flabbergasted," she told The New Yorker's Whitney Balliett. have heard before." The Marsalis jazz style is highly structured, with flying lines, un-expected leaps and dramatic si-lences. He is the first major young black instrumentalist and bandleader to come up in a decade.
Recently young blacks have preferred rock, where the money is.
He was welcomed as a Messiah, as living proof that jazz was still vital enough to produce a "great" who could build on the past

(through the trumpet tradition of Fats Navarro, Clifford Brown and Woody Shaw) with contemporary harmonic and stylistic

But he has been called cold, too intellectual, too flashy. He himself acknowledged that: "My playing isn't spontaneous enough. I play too many eighth notes. It's not open enough."

That was in the distant past, a year ago. He has matured a decade since then; from strength to strength. But the music remains cold, distant, with the accent on the mind rather than the body. And the impression is reinforced by these five unsmiling young men on stage, in suits and bes.
"That's just the way we are,

We're not going to play football. Jazz musicians who wear T-shirts are just emulating rock musicians. Rock musicians jump around and do theatrics. They can't do that in suits and ties. But a jazz musician is supposed to play music in a dignified manner. If you come to the gig raggedy, the audience is going to be rapgedy. That's just my feeling.

"Avant-garde musicians who can't even play their instruments in time walk on stage wearing strange hats, talking about Afri-can religions. I'm tired of that. Americans who are black are not African, we are not European, we are American. America, man, that's what jazz is. It's amazing how a music can so precisely sum up a country. All America is in Duke Ellington's music; he wrote America. But George Gershwin got all the credit, because he was

"I don't mean it as a reproach. That's just how it's been. Look at Benny Goodman and Fletcher Henderson. When I say something like that it will come out sounding like I am cutting them down, It's not their fault. It's not Stan Getz's fault that people vote him No. 1. He doesn't say 'I'm better than Bird. He just wants to

"I like Gershwin's music, some of it, but it was more European than American. Duke Ellington is what America really sounds like. We can't look to Africa, we should rather be thinking about capturing the spirit of America. You don't even have to think about it, just do it."
